The Honorable Department of Justice:

I would like to express my opinions regarding the Microsoft case. Since all the evidence points to the fact that Microsoft was guilty, why not let them pay their fine and the world could back to business. The Attorney Generals of the dissenting States should look at the problems in their own backayrds, instead of prolonging this issue. Most States these days have budget deficits, so what is the benefit of directing additional time and resources to this matter. I'm sure if you polled most consumers, myself included, they would not feel terribly slighted by the Microsoft actions. If I were due compensation, I would donate the money to Homeland Security, which is something really important!

Sincerely,

J. R. Kot Jr.
